Where there is life there is mind, and mind in its most articulated forms belongs to life. Life and mind share a core set of formal or organizational properties, and the formal or organizational properties distinctive of mind are an enriched version of those fundamental to life. More precisely, the self-organizing features of mind are an enriched version of the self-organizing features of life.

4. Mind is related to the external world only by internal representations. 5. Cognition is a non-conscious form of processing, capable of various embodiments, and thus cannot be accessed through phenomenological approaches.

Embodied Mind: Cognitive Science and Human Experience. The book was an important milestone. It criticized mainstream computationalist and cognitivist tendencies in cognitive science by arguing persuasively that the scientific study of the mind could not continue to ignore the experiential and embodied dimensions of human cognition.
